Innovations in Practice

The PPSAT SC has worked to enhance client care and experience by providing information to clients via email where feasible. For example, clients can fill out consent forms by email before their appointment. The email option saves time that would otherwise be spent completing consent forms in the office. PPSAT SC has plans to upgrade to a new electronic health record system that will allow clients to have their own portal where providers can easily send messages and improve lines of communication with clients. Clients will also be able to view test results faster and more efficiently compared with waiting for a phone call or letter in the mail with the results.

Did You Know?

To increase awareness about Title X and related services, each service site in the PPSAT network has community health educators who help promote the availability of reproductive and sexual health services and attend community events. Using community health educators helps PPSAT SC increase its visibility, build connections with specific communities in its service areas, and better understand community needs.

PPSAT SC's training team created a PowerPoint presentation accessible through its online learning system that explains the Title X program and the staff members' job and responsibilities. This training includes steps on how to document a Title X visit in the EHR system. PPSAT has invested time in training its staff at the start of the Title X funding and offers supplemental training based on findings from regular quality improvement and monitoring audits.

PPSAT SC subrecipients have a community referral book tailored to their specific service areas to ensure clients have the resources they need. This referral book is also designed to meet key policy requirements in South Carolina and is updated regularly. The referral book includes faith-based, LGBTQIA+, Latinx, and primary care resources for each service area.
